SENATE

S. No. 198

Introduced by SEN. SHERWIN T. GATCHALIAN

AN ACT
PROVIDING FOR FULL TUITION SUBSIDY IN STATE UNIVERSITIES AND COLLEGES, AND APPROPRIATING FUNDS THEREFORE

EXPLANATORY NOTE

In the 1987 Constitution, the sovereign people have audaciously proclaimed "the right of all citizens to quality education at all levels¹," mandating the State to "take appropriate steps to make such education accessible to all²." In line with the State policy of accessible public education, basic and secondary education are made available free-of-cost to every Filipino child through the public education system. Thus, every Filipino is guaranteed the right to education up to the high school level.

Tertiary education, however, is a completely different story altogether. Glaring inequity in access to higher education continues to impede the Filipino's right to education at this pivotal level. In fact, according to the 2013 Annual Poverty and Indicator Survey (APIS), half of college-age youngsters were unable to pursue higher education due to financial constraints or the need to work and earn for the family. The financial difficulties of many families that simply cannot afford to send their children to college deprives them of a powerful tool to lift themselves out of poverty - a college degree.

The Family and Income Expenditure Survey (FIES) 2012 shows that a family headed by a college graduate has an average family income more than two times larger than a family headed by a high school graduate. This, combined with studies showing more significant private returns on investment in higher education compared to secondary education³, demonstrated the singular power of higher education in improving economic outcomes for the most marginalized segments of our population. With such limited access to higher education, a vicious cycle emerges in which those who would benefit the most from a college education are prevented from obtaining one due to prohibitive costs.

The benefits of higher education, however, are not limited to the individual and his family. In terms of human capital formation, State investment in human capital gives its citizens the knowledge and ability to make the most of the limited resources available. This is what higher education provides, giving countries an advantage in the current global shift toward knowledge-based economies. In addition, higher education allows a country to produce and train more engineers and scientists who play a vital role in the uptake of new technology. By innovating or replicating technologies from more advanced economies, such specialists will contribute toward stimulating entrepreneurial activity and in turn help in job creation⁴. Thus, producing a better-educated workforce has immense implications on collective social and economic development, making inclusive growth a tangible reality.

Given the individual and social advantages of higher education, it would be greatly beneficial to the Philippines if higher education would be given the same level of importance as basic education and secondary education. This would mean implementing a simple but revolutionary education reform - the institutionalization of tuition-free tertiary education. Instituting tuition-free tertiary education in state universities and colleges (SUCs) would increase access to the Philippine higher education system to the level of developed countries with firm commitments to public education, such as Denmark, Finland, Germany, and Sweden, as well as strong emerging economies which have followed in their footsteps, such as Brazil and Chile.

In 2014, the government fell short of its spending target, meaning there are funds that have not been spent accordingly. For infrastructure alone, the shortfall amounted to P89 billion.⁵ This is more than enough to have funded tuition-free education for students in SUCs for at least the last five years. For fiscal year 2014, the SUCs had an unutilized budget amounting to P5.64 billion.⁶ These funds alone would make up approximately one-third (1/3) of the estimated funding needed for 2016. And for the said fiscal year 2016, the government is running under a budget of about P3 trillion.⁷ The sum required to make SUCs tuition-free in the country would amount to P12.6 to 16.4 billion⁸ which is about 0.42 to 0.55 percent of the 2016 budget, which is a reasonable and easily justifiable budget appropriation to make considering the program's vast positive effects on individual and collective development.

Therefore, this legislation seeks to provide for a full tuition subsidy for all current and future enrollees in SUCs. Qualified Filipino citizens will be able to avail of the full tuition subsidy, provided they maintain good academic and moral standing. The tuition fees to be paid by the students will instead be paid directly by the government to the SUCs.

It is time for us to secure, once and for all, the Filipino's right to higher education through decisive action. It is time for us to institute a reform which will ensure that millions of deserving but underprivileged young men and women will be given their rightful opportunity to pursue a college degree. By passing this legislation, we are making a genuine and tangible collective commitment to building the world-class education system that our people deserve.

Support for the passage and approval of this landmark legislation is earnestly sought.
